How Mrs. Hunter spent her summer "break"

Note-able Quotable

You
play
the way
you
practice.

Dear Piano Families,
Thank you so much for allowing me the privilege of teaching your child the JOY of playing the piano! It is my hope that every activity your child experiences in my studio helps your child "catch" my enthusiasm for the piano. For that reason, I spend much of my summer (and a fair amount of cash) purchasing music, apps, and games which I feel may enhance your child's piano journey.

This summer's "finds" include: the card game Note Speed (which quickly became a studio favorite), a new version of the Keyboard Race, and the game Over the Edge which reviews the names of notes and their values.

I attended a workshop for piano teachers at Heid Music presented by Wynn-Anne Rossi, the composer featured at my recent Latin music recital. I won a door prize (WOOT!) and enjoyed a great conversation with Ms. Rossi.

I purchased lots of great new music for my students, but my favorite is the music of Daniel McFarlane. I've long heard that his music resonates with male students, especially, and now I see why. You'll know his music when you hear it! Listen for the crazy beat!

We've got a fun year ahead! Enjoy the journey!

2017-2018 theme: It's a Journey!

You'll soon notice that stoplights figure prominently in the theme for the coming piano year. Parents will indicate their child's level of preparedness for each lesson by marking a red, yellow or green light on the parent log on the front of your child's piano folder. Students will color a stoplight for each assigned song to indicate the level of preparedness to play that song.

Themes make for a fun piano year. So, the search continues for all things stoplight-related. If you spot something with a stoplight theme, please let me know!
